Making Cerebral Palsy visible this October

The Cerebral Palsy Society is calling on New Zealanders to help make sure people who live with Cerebral Palsy – Hōkai Nukurangi* are seen and heard.

“World Cerebral Palsy Day is on October 6 and this October we want Cerebral Palsy to be visible across Aotearoa,” says Cerebral Palsy Society General Manager Clare Williams.

“We want to get people talking about how common Cerebral Palsy is and what it means to live with it – the good and the challenging.”

Cerebral Palsy – Hōkai Nukurangi is a physical disability that affects movement and posture. It is a lifelong condition and refers to a group of permanent conditions caused by a disturbance or injury to the brain during its development.

The disturbance or interference to the development of the infant brain mainly occurs during pregnancy, birth or very soon after birth. Cerebral Palsy – Hōkai Nukurangi can also occur between one month and two years of age.

“Cerebral Palsy – Hōkai Nukurangi is more common than a lot of people realise,” Clare says. “More than 10,000 New Zealanders are believed to live with Cerebral Palsy – Hōkai Nukurangi.”

“A baby is born with Cerebral Palsy – Hōkai Nukurangi every three days. Which means it occurs in approximately 1 in every 500-600 births. It is the most common childhood-onset disability in New Zealand.”

The way Cerebral Palsy – Hōkai Nukurangi impacts each person’s movement and posture is different and can depend on when the brain disturbance occurred, and which parts of the brain are affected.

Clare says raising awareness of the realities of living life with Cerebral Palsy – Hōkai Nukurangi is the Society's goal during October.

People living with Cerebral Palsy – Hōkai Nukurangi can have difficulty with everyday movements, such as sitting, standing, walking or using their hands for everyday tasks.

They may have other medical conditions, including epilepsy, and/or difficulties with seeing, hearing, learning, or talking.

"Amongst the daily challenges, which can include juggling pain and fatigue, there is plenty to smile about.

"People who live with Cerebral Palsy – Hōkai Nukurangi live full and happy lives. They push themselves, they achieve great things, they make their parents proud, they fall in love, they have families, they hold down awesome jobs.

"People who live with Cerebral Palsy – Hōkai Nukurangi are comedians, actors, business executives, researchers, advocates, teachers, athletes, artists, musicians, personal trainers, public speakers – the list goes on."

This World Cerebral Palsy Day, and throughout October, the Society is encouraging people across Aotearoa New Zealand to talk about what it means to live with Cerebral Palsy – Hōkai Nukurangi, how common it is and how to support people who live with it.

"We'd love your help to make Cerebral Palsy – Hōkai Nukurangi visible," Clare says.

"We want to see as many people as possible embracing the colour green, which is the international colour for Cerebral Palsy, and getting behind Be Green & Be Seen – the Cerebral Palsy Society's annual campaign.

"We're asking our members, schools, workplaces, friends and whānau across Aotearoa New Zealand to get involved at some point during October.

"The more people are talking about Cerebral Palsy – Hōkai Nukurangi the better. The more green that's out there to be seen the better.

"By taking part in Be Green & Be Seen you'll be raising awareness about Cerebral Palsy – Hōkai Nukurangi, and making sure that people who live with it are seen."
